Nationals Protest.

Washington players protested against the game being called just when it was, and some of the spectators be-Heved the battle could have been continued for an inning or so longer, but Egan surely acted wisely in stopping the game when he did.

To have continued with the conditions as they were would have invited the possible crippling of some of the players, who could scarcely see the ball,

All the pitchers had to do in the last inning was to shoot over a fast ball, and it was a case of one, two, three, and go to the bench. Rhoades fanned McBride and Johnson in the fifth inning withou either batter getting even a foul. Turner fanned so quickly in the last half of the fifth that it made Egan's head swim, and he stopped the game at once, fearing that either he or Catcher Kahoe might be hit and put out of business.

Cleveland got all of its runs in the first inning, when they demonstrated that the manager who tries to repeat one of his pitchers against Cleveland is tempting fate. Johnson made the Naps look cheap last Thursday, but to-day he did not seem to have much in the way of deceptive twists. At that, he was handicapped by having a team behind him that did not cover much ground.
